

ABSTRACT

A preportioning bag used in food operations wherein a bulk food supply is divided into portions of smaller size. The smaller size portions are then placed in individual bags and stored in a refrigerator or the like until ready for use. Each bag has the days of the week printed thereon in at least one language and the days are color-coded. The day of preportioning or the last day for possible use is marked on the bag to facilitate removal from storage.